WHEREVER tillage is given to the soil, the soil is richer, the soil is more fertile, the soil is more productive. The soil is the basis of all life, and the soil is the basis of all wealth. The soil is the basis of all life, and
the soil is the basis of all wealth.

The soil is the basis of all life, and the soil is the basis of all wealth. The soil is the basis of all life, and
the soil is the basis of all wealth. The soil is the basis of all life, and
the soil is the basis of all wealth.

The soil is the basis of all life, and
the soil is the basis of all wealth. The soil is the basis of all life, and
the soil is the basis of all wealth. The soil is the basis of all life, and
the soil is the basis of all wealth.

The soil is the basis of all life, and

HALLLOWE'EN CELEBRATED

Ordinary Celebrated at Brown Annual Festival. Little Damage Done by Believing Young People. Lye Thrown.

Such things as breaking windows, throwing eggs, and throwing rocks were the chief forms of Hallowe'en celebration in Gettysburg on Saturday night. Little damage was done and the evening was spent in the most particular manner being enjoyed.

The night of evil and vandalism is reported from the West end of town where a woman became rather badly injured by the carriage on the way to the city. The "hills" reflected laughter at having done a job of the night, according to believing ones.

Many doors were being swung open and some of them were badly wrecked and being left open for many hours after the occupants of the houses were in bed. The night was a very successful one for the boys and girls.

times he would bet gamely till his neck had showed, then "pinch," in this way he finally got together enough money to attack his addiction. He bought a pair of horses, a carriage and hired a cookman and a tiger. The day he saw his coach driven up to his door and the tiger dismount and open the door for him was the happiest of his life. He contrasted the scene with his own self in faded colored coat and trousers and yellow striped rent serrag members of the club at which he had been a waiter. Strutting to his residence with the air

For a month he gave himself up to the realization of his dream, never visiting the ladies lest something might occur to mar his enjoyment. At the end of that time he returned to the fold of the cloth of gold with a view simply to amusement. At times he was mad at times, like every other gambler, lost. Finally he struck a relapse of bad luck and for a time feared that he would have to discharge his

Then Leadbeater invented a principle on which he was sure to win at the tables. He tried it and won, though it is punishable his success was rather due to a run of luck than his principle. He won steadily, but not heavily. One day while driving through the suburbs of Monte Carlo, the envy of all who could not afford such a

"What is R. Armand?" asked Lead-better, letting down the little square sack.

"Could not your excellency pay me some of the wages due me?"

Excelsior! How delicious the word always sounded! An idea occurred to the master by which he might discharge the debt without costing him anything. He knew his tiger would smile if he had a chance. Keerylead at Monte Carlo gambled. Lead-

"How much do I owe you, Armand?"
"Five hundred francs."
"Here it is," replied the master, taking five 100-franc notes from his pocketbook. Then he changed from the front to the back seat. "Have you a pack of cards? Ah, how fortunate! Let us have a game. The back seat will serve us for a table. You can sit where you are and play through the window."
"How are very commendable suggestions,"

They were by this time quite out in the country, where they were not likely to meet many people. Leadbetter directed his coachman to drive slowly, and the two gamblers became greatly absorbed in the game. Gradually the lackey's stake went through the back window into his pocket. Within half an hour he had won all the money his master had with him, and this was all Leadbetter possessed except his few articles of baggage. To make his

He will make your existence a possession," he said. "I will sell your possessions and give you back and keep half yourself."

Within the most contemptible breasts has been planted something noble. "No," said the master, "you have won fairly and are entitled to your winnings. Come in here and exchange your livery for my clothes. I will be your lackey."
